Headline:
Brighter for a time but further rain arriving today.

Today:
Largely dry at first with the sunniest skies in the east. Already cloudy in Cornwall though and turning wet here through the morning, with rain spreading east during the afternoon. Much less windy than yesterday and feeling less cold. Maximum temperature 11 deg C (52 deg F).

Tonight:
Rain in the east at first but becoming largely dry overnight with a touch of frost possible later. Clear spells and blustery showers in the west and becoming windier again. Minimum temperature 1 deg C (34 deg F).

Friday:
A bright day with sunny spells and occasional short-lived blustery showers, these mostly in the west. The showers briefly heavy with a chance of hail. Feeling chilly with brisk winds. Maximum temperature 9 deg C (48 deg F).

Outlook for Saturday to Monday:
Cold at first on Saturday, but turning mild and cloudy with rain spreading east. Patchy rain on Sunday with a chance of heavier rain on Monday. Staying mild.
